

SOCIAL GAINS

Why continue to mouth phrases about social gains when the plain facts are that we have tackled a job which can't be done unless every person in the United States cuts radically his standard of living and puts away, not only luxuries but many of the things he now regards as necessities?—Wall Street Journal.

Talking Robot Becomes Patriotic for Canadians

TORONTO, Ont. — Toronto Rotarians have been advised by "Pedro the Voice" to buy war savings stamps and certificates.
"Canada needs your dollars!" Pedro told the Rotarians.
"Pedro" didn't originate the phrase but did create the speech, with the assistance of Dr. J. O. Perrine of New York, assistant vice president of American Telephone and Telegraph company. Dr. Perrine was used by Mrs. Helen Harper, who operated "Pedro," the speech machine.
The articulate robot first amused the Rotarians with his fundamental "Opa" and "Aha," but he really amazed his listeners when he spelled out Mississippi. Then, he repeatedly brought down the house with his melodious rendition of "Sweet Adeline."

Mrs. Harper operated "Pedro" from a console resembling an old-fashioned organ. To make him spell, she made movements of the wrist. To give expression to the word, she had to vary the position of the pedal from three to five times, according to the degree of expression.

Mrs. Harper had to do all this just as quickly as it would have taken to say "concentration," and with half meaning to the word.

Sure to Pass Nazi Plane

Production by September
LONDON — Sir Walter Citrine, general secretary of the British Trades Union congress, told a press conference that American and British production of planes and war materials would surpass Germany's output by September.

Sir Walter, who has just returned from a tour of the United States, said, however, the peak of American production would not be reached until the middle or end of 1942.

He said he believed that American failed "to approach the problem of training workers in the right way" and explained there was "no real national effort of training in the same sense as ours."

Famous Yosemite Pine Thrives Without Soil

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, CALIF. — Occasioned by the question of tourists, a study of a lone redwood tree that grows out of a solid rock face high above the Yosemite valley has been made by the National Park Service.
Naturalists said the tree, which is 80 feet tall, grows out of a fissure in the granite face known as El Capitan. Its food is manufactured in its leaves from water and carbon dioxide, and such minerals as it may require may be obtained from the rock. Its supply of moisture apparently is gained from winter rain and snow.

Buried Inca Cities Unearthed in Peru

NEW YORK—"The city above the clouds" and "the inaccessible city," both last seen by the ancient Inca civilization flourished in South America, have been found 12,000 feet up in the Peruvian Sierras, an expedition reported.

Associates of Axel L. Wenner-Gren, Swedish industrialist who is sponsoring the archeological expedition, made public a report by Dr. Paul Fajos.

The discovery, they said, promised to "uncover an enormous empire of the pre-Inca races," and added that in "sheer weight and magnitude" the masonry already unearthed rivaled "the Egyptian pyramids and Angkor in French Indo-China."

The expedition reported that three to five feet of humus and a full-grown mountain forest covered the two ancient cities. Their site is a valley in the south central highlands north of Cuzco, across the Andes from Machu Picchu.

Uncovered already in "the city above the clouds," the report from the expedition said, were three man-made masonry caves strikingly similar to "the place of the caves" described in Inca sagas as the point from which ancient Andean tribes began their career of conquest and civilization.

About 25 per cent of "the city above the clouds" has been excavated, expedition leaders said. Over a 1,000-square-yard area the explorers found tiers of white granite walls ascending 300 feet up a 60-degree slope, a stairway of 336 hand-hewn stone steps, built out from native rock and fed by elaborate water channels, and a sewage and drainage system.

First Adopt Fort Plan
First Aimed at Napoleon
A SOUTHEAST COAST ENGLISH PORT.—The British disclosed that they are utilizing a system of sea fortresses begun nearly a century and a half ago against the threatened Napoleonic invasion as a part of the complex defensive network set up to keep Reichswehr Hitler's forces away.

The sea fortresses—Modernized "Martello towers"—dot the south-east and southern coasts. Their foundations are on the floor of the sea, some of them are little martial communities, almost like a section of the Maginot line.

The biggest and most elaborately modernized ones squat in the water around some of the most important south coast towns like huge, fluted gasworks tanks. They housed small detachments of artillery, anti-aircraft gunners, infantry and machine gunners.

The British got the idea of these "Martello towers" from Corsica. In 1794, a tower on Cape Mortella, armed with only three cannon, held off British ships for hours. The British corrupted the name to "Martello."

Ontario Plans to Have War Gardens This Year
LONDON, Ont. — The Ontario Horticultural association will organize and promote an extensive plan of war gardens this year as a means of offsetting a shortage of farm help and market gardeners.

The society is the largest of its kind in the British empire. Its membership is 30,000 and its president, E. Foster, parks superintendent of this city.

According to Mr. Foster, the board of directors will bring the plan of war gardens before the association's annual convention next month. After a survey, leaders of the proposal, discovered that there will in all probability be a shortage of labor in agriculture next year. Already there is a shortage of market gardeners in various sections of the province.

British Girls' Skirts
To Go Higher in Spring
LONDON.—Milady's skirts are going higher in war-time England this spring.

"And if material becomes scarce due to the war, dresses may be even shorter," said a London designer who announced that spring lengths would average 18 inches above the ground.

In New York, style experts said the average for smartly dressed American women was 16 to 17 inches.

School on the Sands
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla.—Sunshine school, in this city, holds its classes on the beach, with pupils and teachers wearing bathing suits.

Largest Cypress Tree
Is 3,500 Years Old
ORLANDO, Fla.—The world's largest cypress tree, called "The Senator" or "The Big Tree," grows between Orlando and Sanford. Estimated from water marks on its trunk to be 3,500 years old, it stands 125 feet high. It is 17 feet in diameter at the base and the first limb is 75 feet from the ground.
